THEATRE-HARRY WEAVER WIll tonight present his name to the public for a Benefit, and we are sure it will meet with a hearty response. When Mr. WEAVER _iade his first appearance here, he was comparatively, unknown, but his matchless performance in The Old Gnard, stamped him as an artist of no ordinary merit, and as such he has a claim upon the public to-night. The comedy of Naval Eagagements will be performed for the first time in many menths, and the sketch of The Debutante or a peep behind the scenes. Between peices Mr. Durrisho will sing and Miss Constanting execute a dance.

We copy the following notice from the Dispatch of yesterday morning, and heartily endorse everything said therein:

New Periodical Bepot. Our good and industrious young friend, William Collier, formerly an associate in the Dispatch Company, has just embarked in the news dealing, periodical and ationery business, at the corner of Church and Cherry streets, opposite the Post-office. His little store is decidedly the neatest and most tastefully fitted up and accommodating young citizens, and we beat cak for him a generous support from the reading public. All of the latest publications will be kept by him, in addition to all desirable articles of stationery. Go and see him, straightway.

FRIEND MERCHA,-You will please allow me to correct a statement that I noticed in this morning's edition of your paper of the villainous assault upon me at Mount Pleasant. It stated that I was line, so as to be in position to advance sitting at the Tavern door. That is not between us and the James River. so. On the 23d of June, the sixth division of Gen. Buell's army had reached Tuscumbia, Ala. Gen. Buell's headquarters were near Florence, on the south bank of the Tennessee. The correspondent of the Cincinnati Gusstle gives the following account of the state of affairs in that Plumb, Quartermaster, reported the facts to Gen. Garffeld, commanding, and the same has been forwarded to headquarters of Gen. Buell, in hopes that measures may be immediately taken to secure so much of the lot as may be found. Without doubt this in but a sample of what may be found in the way of contraband property. Indeed, it seems to your correspondent that a mistaken policy governs our movements as an army. Here we are, surrounded by as inveterate and determined a set of rebels as can be found in the entire South. They have given their means without stint to inaugurate and carry forward the rebellion They have all around us immense quantities of property, enough to delray the expenses of feeding the entire army of tien. Buell. So determined are those rebels to sustain their cause at all hazards that they boldly say to our Generals that all of these immense corn fields are designed to sustain the Confederate army another year. And yet we are obliged to feed our animals on short rations, and to pay from Northern loyal pockets not only the expense of transporting at great disadvantage the supplies for the men, but the poor soldier is compelled to pay (if he buys) an enormous price-for any luxury he may desire to obtain. Buttar, 40 cents; eggs, 25 cents per dosen; pies, 25 cents each; dressed pigs, 25 cents per pound; chickens, 25 cents, and poor at that, are moderats samples of prices charged, and paid for in good Treasury notes.

This discovery took place on Saturday, and the Rebels were bewildered and confused in their efforts to unravel the mystery which surrounded the entire move-They sent down batteries on the right bank of the Chickahominy so as to command all the bridges, and posted heavy bodies of troops on all the roads leading to them. This was done with the expectation that our tenops would be obliged to retreat across to the White advanced, and the Rebel hordes were in high glee at the premised capture of the entire Yankee army.

But while Rebel Major-Generals were in Council, their Division Commanders sending hurried despatches, asyouncing the disappearance of the right wing of McCleHan's army, that wily and sagacious soldier was executing a movement which is destined to emblazon his name among the brightest in the scroll of mile itary fame. Slowly and silently the flank movement was begun in accordance with movement was on foot. On Saturday morning the Rebels de-termined to recall their immense forces from beyond the Chickahominy, and having for the first time penetrated the grand design of McClellan, they commenced rapidly moving after our troops, at the same time they threw large bodies of baffled soldiery upon the right of their

Wishing you night, and until late on Sunday morning. The rear of Summer's column had halted here, and were ordered to destroy such ammunition and stores as would be likely to fall into the hands of the enemy. The locomotive "Speedwell" was linked to twelve freight cars filled with ordnance stores and ammunition, and, true to her name, was soon on the way to the Chickahominy Bridge, with two hundred pounds of steam on the valve and the water below the lowest guage. The train was arranged with fuses, so as to explode living soul on board, she sped on her mighty errand. In a few minutes an exosion was heard that shook the earth for miles, and, as the huge volume of smoke rolled away, a load was lifted off the hearts of all that so much valuable ammunition as we had accumulated there could not be turned against ourselves. Shortly after the explosion the enemy Yesterday a foraging party from Gen-articld's brigade discovered distinct seemed to be aware of the cause and detraces of the whereabout of a let of 1,000 | sign, as they advanced rapidly upon us. As they ad-Plumb, Quartermaster, reported the facts vanced through the woods, on the north and west of the station, they emerged into an immense open field of one hundred acres, which until trampled by our troops, was a splendid wheat field. Here the battle raged intensely all day, our brave men holding the enemy at bay and repulsing them with heavy loss. General Sedgwick stationed a battery of 12pound brass Napoleons south of the railroad, so as to command both it and the road lately leading to Porter's position. This poured volley after volley of grape and canister, until the enemy literally lay in piles in every direction.

At this point the enemy made a desperate onset on Burns' Brigade, in overwhelming numbers, but were driven back with heavy loss. Three brigades attacked Baxter's Fire Zouaves, who were stationed in the very post of danger. The Zouaves opened on them with heavy firm which staggered the enemy, who recled and fell back, but again advanced with a strong reinforcement in the rear, shouting and yelling like fiends. Gradually overpowered by numbers, the Zon-

These brave veterans attacked the Rebels with such impetuosity that the joined regiments drave the Rebela back over the ratiroad nearly to Fair Oaks Station, a distance of over two miles. Captain Megonigal, of Co. B (Weccacoe Engine), fell dead at the first fire, while cheering on his men. He was shot through

By this time the work of destruction of the stores and the ammunition was successfully accomplished, and orders were given to our wearied and undannted troops to follow in the steps of the main army. Surgeon Tripler had made the best desposition possible of our wounded at the hospitals at this point, who were unable to be transported, and he detailed several surgeons to remain

All through Sanday night our flank guard marched to the left with the enemy ollowing and evincing a disposition to harasa them. But our men were coul and calm, and marched as if on parade. Having crossed the bridge over "White Oak" Swamp, it was blown up, thus checking the advance of the enemy. On Monday morning the enemy began the attack on our rear, having rebuilt the bridge-They came on in immense force, following the road we had come.

Not much of the "moral" it's true, my infended to precipitate themselves upon us with all his force. In view of leum oil have been experinkle of the immoral.

Franklin's Division, with a portion of Smith's Division on the right, Kearney's Division was thrown across the New-market road. Hecker's Division across the Central road, and Richardson's Divison across Charles City road, all three eading down from Richmond. About two o'clock the enemy was disovered advancing all along these roads in immense force, the clouds of dust along the lines of the approach being dis-Tunker Bran, July 2, 1862.

After the tremendous battle on the right, in which Fitz John Porter's Division was engaged, including McCall's Recither cut us to pieces or drive us into the river. All this was the result of their defusion with regard to our movements; wing, that portion of the army fell back they persisting in believing it was a retreat, while, in fact, it was a deliberate and successful strategic movement.

The Robels fought with desperation hoping to detach our divisions and crash them in detail. General McClellan was everywhere through the fight, directing reinforcements to be sent wherever the front seemed weakest. General McCall, with the Pennsylvania reserves, was staioned in the rear of the several points held by the commanders named, and within supporting distances of them all. At four o'clock in the afternoon despatches were received at headquarters, that the enemy were being successfully repulsed at all points, with the exception of General Kearney's, who reported that the enemy were too strong for him, and were forcing him from his position.

Word was immediately sent to Gen. House by the same route that they had | McCall, to advance to his relief, which his men did on the double quick, notwithstanding their previous fatigue and exhaustion. They were soon engaged in the thickest of the fight, which grew hotter, as every moment brought fresh troops from Richmond to replace these whom our brave reserves were leveling with

The tide of battle ebbed and flowed over the plain for nearly an hour with uncertain result. At this time General McCall and his staff galloped towards the front to incite his brave troops to stronger exertions, when he was seen to fall from his horse mortally wounded in the breast.

His staff gathered around him, and begged to be allowed to bear his body to a place of quiet and safety. "No," said he, "let me die on the field," and in the momentary confusion which the fall of their beloved leader made, his division was slowly driven back. Almost at the same time, Captain H. J. Biddle, aid to General McCall, was mortally wounded.

Still the contest raged more madly, the efforts of his men to reach him being almost frantic. In this desperate charge the loss of life on both sides exceeded anything that has occurred since the contest commenced. The dead lay in piles as high as tents. Among the slain were Lieutenants J. H. Kohn and W. M. Watmough. General Meade was teverely wounded in the abdomen, and General Reynolds was taken prisoner. It is tince ascertained that he is unburt in Rich-

At this juncture word was despatched to General Sumner that assistance was required by General Kearney, and his men immediately advanced to the critiheadquarters. We have a National Government and we have a State Government. Both these have taken their stand, and no one can be so stupid as not to see that those who encourage war against the governments must invovie themselves in serious conequenses. The "Southern sympathizer" must learn that this is not a mere contest between rival candidates for office. Asthe historian represents Cato as saying, in the Roman Senate, "this not a contest about who shall be first in the Republic, but whether we shall have a republic." He who encourages attempts to destroy our National and our State Government, must feel that he is incurring some risk. All such encouragement costs blood and blood will demand something more than water.
